

Fiaschetti and 145 Others Hit By Police Shift

Head of Italian Squad to Walk Beat in Brooklyn and 135 Are Withdrawn From Courts

10 Lieutenants Changed

Magistrates' Aids to Resume Active Duty Under Enright's Order

Commissioner Enright yesterday announced sweeping changes in the personnel of the Police Department, chief of them being the demotion to patrolman of First Class Detective Sergeant Michael Fiaschetti and the transfer of ten lieutenants "for the good of the service." He also ordered the withdrawal, effective January 1, 1923, of 135 policemen assigned to special duty at various city offices and magistrates' courts.

The reduction in rank of Sergeant Fiaschetti came as a surprise. He has been ordered to walk a beat out of the Herbert Street station, in Brooklyn. His salary is cut from $3,300 to $2,850 a year. As head of the Italian division for the last eighteen years, Fiaschetti has been identified with the apprehension and subsequent conviction of numerous well known criminals.

Decorated By Italy
Three weeks ago Fiaschetti received a decoration from the King of Italy in recognition of his aid to Italian diplomats who visited the United States during the war. In recent months he directed the work in the Varotta kidnapping case, resulting in five arrests and three convictions for murder in the first degree.

Another change was the transfer of Lieutenant Frank McCarrick, for years in charge of the Detective Bureau at night. He was assigned to duty in the office of Inspector Bolan, with headquarters in the West Sixty-eighth Street station.

Commissioner Enright sent letters to the Chief City Magistrate, City Chamberlain, Corporation Counsel and other city departments withdrawing, on January 1 next, the 135 policemen on special duty there. These patrolmen have been serving as special guards, detectives and process servers. They are to resume active duty and their jobs with the city departments to be filled by special appointments, lifting the financial burden of the police budget and giving the Commissioner 135 extra men.

Many Other Transfers
Nine other lieutenants were transferred and three sergeants and twelve patrolmen were ordered from the Clinton Street station to duty in other Manhattan precincts. The lieutenants transferred were Ezekiel E. Keller, East Thirty-fifth Street to First Inspection District; Joseph Cortesay, West Forty-seventh Street to Brooklyn Avenue, Brooklyn; Dennis R. Hourigan, City Island to East Thirty-fifth Street; Henry B. Winant, West New Brighton, S. I., to the Second Inspection District; S. L. Harry K. Lobbel, Brooklyn Avenue, Brooklyn, to the Ninth Inspection District; William H. Anderson, Butler Street, Brooklyn, to Chief Inspector's office; John C. McManus, Third Inspection District to the Fourth Inspection District; Thomas P. McNamara, from the Fourth Inspection District to West Forty-seventh Street; and Bernard E. Byrne, Twelfth Inspection District, Jamaica, to West New Brighton, S. I.

N. Y. Man Beaten and Robbed In Upper Silesia, He Says
BERLIN, Aug. 25.—Oskar Haas, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has arrived in Berlin complaining of having been beaten and robbed during the past disturbance at Katowitz, Upper Silesia. He told the American officials investigating his case that he was unable to obtain protection from the Polish police, although he identified himself as an American citizen, but that on the contrary the police themselves beat and robbed him.

He was traveling from Warsaw to the United States at the time of the trouble.

Bedtime Stories

Mrs. Reddy Investigates

By Thornton W. Burgess

The failure of one, I am bound to confess, I have found paves the way for another's success.

—Mrs. Reddy.

When Mrs. Reddy had discovered that Reddy Fox was being chased by Bowser the Hound she had guessed right away that Reddy must have been up to Farmer Brown's barnyard and she had been very much provoked, very much indeed. You see she felt that Reddy should have kept away from there until their dinner, for children were big enough to leave home and go out into the Great West.

She led those four young Foxes to a big rock on the top of a big hill in the Old Pasture from which they saw Bowser the Hound chasing their father along an old road at the foot of the hill. Thus they learned about one of the dangers they would have to watch out for and that Bowser the Hound was greatly to be feared. Mrs. Reddy had pointed out where Bowser lived, and told them that never must they go near there. Of course the four little Foxes promised that they never would.

After Bowser at his heels had disappeared Mrs. Reddy led the four young Foxes home. She sent them into the house, which you know is a hole deep in the ground, and told them that under no circumstances were they to go out until their noses outside until she called them. Then she sat down to think.

"Reddy would never have been so foolish as to go over to Farmer Brown's unless he had discovered something there that was a temptation too great for him to resist," thought Mrs. Reddy. "I wonder what it was. It must have been something that would make an extra fine dinner. I believe I'll run over there myself. Reddy has led Bowser far away. I cannot even hear his voice now. From that big rock on the top of the hill I saw Farmer Brown and Farmer Brown's Boy at work down in the cornfield. It is perfectly safe to go over to that barnyard now. I believe I'll investigate."

So Mrs. Reddy started off to investigate, which means, as you know, to look into and find out about. Straight over to Farmer Brown's trotted Mrs. Reddy, taking care that she should not be seen by any one. As she crept up back of the barn she heard a sound that made her tingle all over. "Quack, quack, quack!" came the voices of Ducks from somewhere back of Farmer Brown's house. "That's it!" exclaimed Mrs. Reddy. "That's it!" Reddy heard those Ducks and he just couldn't keep away from them. The temptation was too much for him. My, how those children never have tasted anything so delicious. I'll never have another such chance to get them a Duck, and they really ought to know what a Duck is like.

She saw that they were in a low pen of wire

She slipped around the corner of the barn and up to the very place from which Reddy had peeped out at those Ducks. She saw that they were in a low pen of wire. The way was clear. Swiftly she ran forward, jumped over that low fence, seized one of those Ducks by the neck, swung it over her shoulder, leaped out again and was out of sight before Mrs. Brown could reach the door when she heard the frightened quacking of the Ducks that remained.

Treated Like a Servant, Says Wife Who Sues

Mrs. Isabel C. Stewart, Charging Husband Earns $100,000 a Year, Asks Court for a Separation

Other Women Are Named

Letters in Pet Terms Are His Defense; Decision Is Reserved on Alimony

Mrs. Isabel Cranford Stewart, of the Hotel Chelsea, has applied to Supreme Court Justice May in Brooklyn for $500 a month, $5,000 expenses and $1,000 counsel fees pending trial of her suit for separation from Vergil Augustus Stewart, of the firm of V. A. Stewart & Co., commission merchants, at 207 Duane Street. She charges that she was compelled to do a servant's work in her home, although her husband has an income of $100,000 a year.

In addition to this, Mr. Stewart had another quality which annoyed her, she said. He was a very much more than a servant. He was a man who inspired strange women to volunteer their cheering influences. Mrs. Stewart stated in her complaint. "Let me recall an incident that occurred in July of 1920," she said. "I walked into the Astor Hotel and met my husband in company with a flashily dressed and common looking woman. Both of them became very much excited and flustered. He introduced her to me, and she said: 'I just had to speak to your husband, he looked so lonely.'"

At Theater With Woman
"On June 4, 1921, mother and I went to the Apollo Theater to see 'Love Birds.' As we were seated my husband entered the theater. With him was a stunningly beautiful young woman, gown in a daringly extreme décolleté costume, discarding freely and fully her back and arms. They sat in the orchestra and throughout the performance leaned their heads very close together and appeared very friendly. After the performance we lost all track of them."

When he arrived home at 3:30 the following morning, Mrs. Stewart declared, she asked him whether he had seen the performance of the play. He replied: "Why, yes. One night when I was strolling all alone on Broadway I dropped in and got a cheap seat in the gallery."

Stewart, in his answer, denied all his wife's charges, and accused her, on the other hand, of a disinclination to have children, the principal cause of their disagreement. Because she refused to keep house he was compelled to eat at restaurants, he complained. He is now living at the Standish Arms, an apartment hotel in Brooklyn.
